MOAN OF THE PRISONER.

Sung by the Hutchinsons, at Sing Sing, on Thanks

The convict immured in the prison's cold cell,
Away from the friends who have loved him so well,
In silence sits mouston on scene of the past,
His heart fall of grief, his tears falling fast:
How piecrain his grounds I how plaintive his moans"I'm only a Prisoner whom oohody owns,"

O sad was the hour when he turned from the way, And yielded his heart to the Tempter a prey! The wares of despit how willly they roll. As the darkness of night settles down on his soul! How piercing his groans! how plaintire his moans—"I'm unly a Prisoner, whom nobody owas."

Osm is a bitter and poisonous shing—
It piercesh he soul with its dart and its sting;
And nacesh but Repentance can wipe out the stain,
And the Coavier restore to God's favour agalo;
How piercins his zeroams I how plaintive his monas—
"I'm only a Prisoner, whom mobody owns."

But hark to the truth which the Gospel proclaims To him that is bound in sin's railling chains: "Tho need 'st not deepar, for a Saviour hash died, And buls thee, repensant come stand at his side: He braseful his varnast He piless hly monn! The Prisoner is one whom his Maker yet owns." VI.

O come at the call I heed the message of love Which the Spirit of God brings down from above! O tars from thy sine, cast thy follies away. And open the heart to the Gospel's bright ray: God hearth, thy grouns! He pities thy moans! The Prisoner is one whom his Maker yet owns.

Treat kindly the Prisoner, we followers of Him Whose grace hath restrained you from outbreat O with it nonerey his theray abode, And point out before him the heaven y road: O list to his grouns—his pittiful moans—The Prisoner is one whom his Maker yet owns-
